

After such an experience as the SOPHIA Comenius Project was, it is difficult even to express a general appreciation, not only because all of us liked the different aspects of the project, but also because when recollecting memories, the feelings that come to our mind are predictably contrasting: the pleasure of having the house again to ourselves and, at the same time, the nostalgia for our Dutch host, the desire to stay in The Netherlands for at least one month and the (honestly very little) need of going back to our ordinary life. ...

What is incontrovertible is the fact that we will never again have such a wonderful opportunity to meet new friends, learn new things, know new cultures, acquire more skills for the future and a unique knowledge of ourselves, and have a great time like this. And even though we may have had also some difficulties, we got over them. We will remember this experience for ever also because of the sense of communion created in those ten days. Moreover some of us are still in contact with their Dutch friends and we are likely to meet again very soon.
